Chapter Leader Notes from Susan

If Christmas is hard. If you've lost someone dear. Just look in your heart,
And you'll know they're still here.
The star in the sky, the light falling snow.
The cardinal outside, it seems like they know.

If this is a time,
When you're struggling through.
Just do what you can, for what matters, is you. There's no need to be merry, there's no need to be bright.
Just do what you can, it will be alright.

By Lorna Gibson

Dear Friends,

I wish each of you a kind and peaceful holiday. Honor your loved one how you need to, and do what feels best for your fragile, yearning heart. You are missing a huge piece of you, so do whatever you need to do to find a sliver of peace. Focus on what you can control ~ do what is right for you and your family during the holidays. Allow yourself a range of emotions ~ it's ok to be sad and it's ok to feel joy.

I was remembering back to the first year with Westley gone. I know I struggled to believe that he was gone and not coming home again. We would not celebrate another birthday or holiday with him. We would not celebrate the upcoming graduations of his or his brother and sister. We would not see him in another musical performance or view his art gallery or celebrate his career choice.

There were so many parts of our lives that are forever changed when Westley died. My grief can be so painful, it just hurts my mind, my body and settles in my soul. I carry it with me always. It ebbs and flows, is gentle and quiet and can be harsh and loud. It is my grief, and I will carry it with me always. It is my love of Westley, and I will carry him with me always, in my thoughts, in my heart and deep in my soul.

I remember attending the Candle Lighting Ceremony the first year my son died, and I am forever grateful for this evening of remembrance. The ceremony gave me a safe place to honor and remember Westley with our family.

Our candle lighting ceremony offered me a place to remember my son with others who understand. It is an evening of kindness and hope. We offer a sliver of peace to you and your family and a place to gather to remember and honor our children who have gone to soon.

Your friend,

Susan Westley's mom

The Gift We Give Ourselves

Six Christmases later, I think I have run the gamut of emotions. Of course, the first two Christmases after my daughter Nina died were pretty much a blur. I do remember the first one; so desperately trying to go through the motions and determined that my family would have as unchanged a Christmas as possible. I would momentarily lapse into my grief stupor, only to pick myself up by the bootstraps and zombie-like, plod onward toward my goal to "normalize" an anything-but-normal Christmas.

Nina adored the holidays. She could scarcely wait for the day after Thanksgiving so we could pull out the holiday music tapes, get out the cookie press so she could make her favorite Spritz cookies, and decorate her daybed frame with tiny Christmas lights. Therefore, I was positive that Nina would want us to go on with Christmas as if the numbing and life-altering tragedy that had befallen our family had never occurred. I had convinced myself that it is what she would have wanted so out came the Christmas tree and all the ornaments. Shopping commenced as usual, plowing my way through crowds of cheerful people, full of the spirit of the season. I wouldn't allow myself to see that I didn't belong amongst them -at least that year. Eventually, the charade took its toll, and I paid for it for weeks afterwards. Then again how could any of us know how we should feel that first Christmas, or what we should or shouldn't do during the holidays after our child died? For most of us, we had never experienced the death of a child before. There are no step-by-step rulebooks on how to grieve. And even if there were, each of our children is unique and therefore so is our grief.

That second Christmas I didn't have enough energy to even run on empty. I felt drained and barely made it through necessary day-to-day tasks. The Christmas tree made it out of the box that year but sat undecorated in the middle of the living room floor. Only when my son asked about five days before Christmas, if we could either put some lights on it and sit it in its customary corner, or just put it away that Christmas did I try to do anything with it at all. That year I didn't attempt to sugarcoat my emotional state of mind I didn't pretend that everything was "normal." If possible, we would cut November, December and January 1st out of our calendars just close our eyes and wish it away. But since we can't, we have to do the next best thing we need to give ourselves a gift this holiday season. And in doing this, we give our family and friends a gift as well. That gift is taking care of us through this trying holiday season, to do what feels right to us.

We can try to spare ourselves any unnecessary stress. That could mean doing away with the old family traditions and making some new ones. It could mean having Christmas dinner at a restaurant. That gift to us might be to go away for the holidays; for others that may be just staying home and doing nothing. Maybe a relative or family friend could help with any preparations or gift buying that we feel we might want to do this year. Possibly they could involve any surviving siblings in their holiday happenings so that they too feel like they are participating in something for the holidays. So often our family and friends feel helpless and desperately want to find some way to assist us and this is one way that they can. ~from the TCF Chapter in Tuscaloosa, Alabama said "No matter how many people or how many presents, the pulsating void that seems too large for your heart to hold keeps on drawing your attention back to the child who is missing. As others laugh and play, your thoughts fly away - to Christmases past or a snowy cemetery. "Give me a special gift this year. Let me weep."

The friendship and understanding of other bereaved parents are one of the most helpful gifts we can give ourselves. Other bereaved parents will let us reminisce of happier Christmases' past; will allow us to speak our child's name without hesitation; and will let us cry and not be uncomfortable with our tears. It is so consoling to be able to share your feelings with someone who understands that, for us, grief does have a place in our holiday. In turn, by being a listening ear for them we have given them a gift as well.

When I think back, I am not sure if I found comfort in hearing that the holidays would get easier in time. I think I was so preoccupied (and with good reason) with the fact that my Nina was gone, and the holidays would never be the same. But I have learned to know what I can and cannot handle. I have learned how to say, "I just can't do that this year". I have learned that, although I couldn't imagine it then, with each passing year the holidays have become a little easier to deal with. And I absolutely believe that Nina does understand my need to alter Christmas since she died.

That she would want me to change what I need to in order to get through the holidays. Nina would want me, as all of our children would want us, to be gentle with ourselves and to take care of our tender hearts. That gift we give ourselves is also a gift we give to them that they would want for us: for us to find as much peace in whatever way that we possibly can.

We have many new TCF members this year who will be facing that first Christmas without their child I will, as I know all of us will, keep them all close in our thoughts and hearts these next two months.

With love, peace and gentle thoughts this holiday season, Cathy L. Seehuetter St. Paul, MN – TCF

MISSING DREAMS

Inside me is a tight, dark empty space, not large. I try to keep it deep and covered well, for looking there, is painful. Layers of busyness bury it. And I can keep it small by telling myself there is no time for it. Then comes the casual mention of something ordinary as a flat tire. And suddenly it swells, and I am engulfed by it, remembering.

My son, usually happy, optimistic, confident, even as a child, my gentle child who never wanted to hurt or be hurt by anyone, complained that nothing is going well. He's broken his glasses, lost some important papers and had a flat tire ... not all that day on the way to the hospital, just within the past three or four days.

And I realize he's really saying that being the father of a baby who may not live is too much to bear. I ache for him and want to comfort him with hugs and assurances that all will be well as I did when he was small. But when the doctors have no certainties to proclaim, how can I?

A painful memory. So, I push it down in the empty space where I deem that it must stay. And I keep the space dark, until on that day I catch a glimpse of my daughter-in-law absentmindedly stroking the arm of the chair, and I am back again. Watching her stand beside the baby, careful to avoid the tubes connecting him to the machines, but finding places to touch him, stroke him, love him wherever she can. A small bare leg. His temple. Softly touching him, and I know she aches to pick him up, as I do, and rock him and tell him, „This is not the way it's supposed to be. Life should be good! But we can only touch, not hold.

The space is tight again and buried. Covering it are more bearable memories which I can allow myself to talk about. Seeing the pear tree along a street reminds me that there is a small grove of trees and a bench in the park dedicated to his memory. And I can think about the beautifully simple letter my son and his wife wrote and sent to friends to meet us there to help create that special place.

Or I can remember my son bravely thanking all those friends for their love and speaking to them of the joy he knew in having a son, if only for a short time. I add more memories as time passes. Seeing the tenderness between two people who know the need for caring and know how to find caring in a world where most of their contemporary's prize macho individualism. Admiring their courage when they include a visit to an empty baby's room as they show their new home to guests, knowing of their hope for their future.

But still the empty space is there, sometimes, when I dare, I ask myself "why?" And each time I realize again that the space is empty and will always remain empty because there is no life there to fill it. No baby who would be waving goodbye, by now. No toddler starting to walk. No small boy learning skills from his grandfather. Or teenager to watch with pride. No life. And so, I quickly cover the space and push it down in the dark and keep it as small and tight as I can. Because it hurts to look.

GIFTS OF LOVE

A donation to our chapter in honor and loving memory of your child.

A love gift is a gift of money or of time given to the Northern Lake County Illinois Chapter of the passionate Friends. It is usually in memory of a child who has died, but donations can also be from individuals who want to honor a relative or friend who has died, a gift of thanksgiving that their own children are alive and well, or simply a gift from someone who wants to help in the work of your chapters. Love gifts are acknowledged each month in the newsletter.

Thank you to Barbara Fleming for sponsoring the December newsletter in loving memory of her daughter, Kerrin Lee Flemming.

The day your loved one dies - you become a sacred memory keeper. A protector of their legacy and even in those moments when the grief you now carry is far too heavy, you carry it anyways because it's a reflection of how much you love and miss someone that mattered and made a huge difference in your life. Regardless of time.

Say their name and tell me something about them.

Always offer hope – As difficult as the holiday season is, it is especially critical that we offer hope to all we serve. Most of us look back at our first couple of years and wonder how on earth we survived; however, the fact is we did survive. Many of us have found our footing and discovered what works for us. It is so important that those new in grief share in our hope; that we convey to them that as difficult as it seems there can still be good moments. There is also the hope that we can even find joy in the memories of the past and the experiences of the future, if we continue to share their life and honor the love that still remains planted firmly in our hearts.

Thanks for all you do in honor of your children, grandchildren and siblings,

Alan
